■ Open Discussion between Dai-Yu-Kyo Foundation of International Exchange Assistance and Research and Consulates in Osaka

On September 13 (Tuesday) at Primrose Osaka, an open discussion sponsored by the Dai-Yu-Kyo Foundation of International Exchange Assistance and Research was held with Consulates in Osaka. Dai-yu-Kyo scholars will also make a presentation about their participation in OFIX’s international understanding education program, which dispatches foreign supporters to elementary and high schools in Osaka. The event was attended by scholars from China, Korea, Vietnam, and Indonesia who had a very meaningful exchange of opinions with the representatives of their respective Consulates.

Voice of the Consulates

We would like to give our thanks for the support given to the scholars.

To promote international exchange, not only do we expect international students to learn the technology in Japan, but we also expect them to become future bridges between Japan and their countries.

Therefore, they should not just study at the university, but should understand Japanese culture and language. And when they come to study in Japan, it is necessary to tell them about the importance of exchange with society and engage in activities like the international understanding education program. We hope to create opportunities where international students would be able to make a contribution to society.

Voice of the Scholars

After making a presentation to Japanese students, the scholars could feel that students were getting more interest in their countries. “Education” does play an important role in the promotion of cultural understanding.

As a foreign supporter, I was able to experience introducing China’s culture, geography and history to high school students in Japanese, which I think was very significant. It would be good if the students will have a deeper understanding of other countries, which would increase their desire to go abroad.

■ Completing the Global Human Resource Training Project (OFF-JT) Eri Shiota

My name is Eri Shiota and I have been employed at OFIX since April, with the desire to work and make a contribution to Osaka, the place where I was born. While I was still in the university, I had the opportunity to go on an internship to an American Elementary school. There, I introduced Japanese culture to teachers and students who weren’t familiar with Japan. Ever since then, I had this strong feeling of wanting to have more people know about Japan. And for this reason, I would like to be involved in grass roots international exchange so I may be more useful to foreigners and be able to make more foreigners understand Japan.

As mentioned in the 37th issue of OFIX News last month, I have trained for 3 months at Ehle Institute. During the training, not only did we hone our language skills, but also skills needed by working people. So, we also studied about information processing and business manners. From the many courses that we had, business plan development and practicum left the greatest impression. The proposal of the instructor was as a product of the class, we were to make a multilingual pamphlet for Kamagasaki (Osaka City, Nishi-nari ward) so people would know and understand its current situation. With the cooperation of COCOROOM (an NPO closely working with the region), we conducted a 3-day field work, walking around the town and interviewing people at the shops, hostels, public baths and even interviewed KOKOROOM Representative Kanayo Ueda about KOKOROOM's internship program and activities. It was a short time, but we were able to meet different kinds of people we have never met before, and through that exchange, we were able to have a deeper understanding about the community. Although I was born and raised in Osaka, I was able to know a side of Osaka I've never known before. I was surprised, excited and at the same time was able to learn about the diversity in Japan and it made me think more about multicultural societies.

With regards to the pamphlet production project, its aims and mission, plan, distribution of duties, etc, the trainees discussed everything among themselves, getting some advice from the instructor, and did everything on their own. Allowing the trainees to do everything from planning to production has given an opportunity to the trainees to work as an organization, discover the strengths of each and realize just what it means to work as a team. I would like to make use of this experience in the future and strive to grow to be able to make a contribution to the internationalization of Osaka.

(6) OFIX Coordinator for International Relations Report

■ Philippine Cuisine

Hello, everyone! It's your International Relations Coordinator, Alvin! Recently, the days are still hot, but the evenings and mornings are very cool. It's already autumn. And when you say autumn, it's about food!! So for this edition, I'll be talking about Philippine food.

When you say Thai food, you think of tom yam kung or Pad thai...Vietnamese food, you think of Pho...Indonesian food, you think of Nasi Goreng...but Philippine food? For people who don't know the Philippines, nothing comes to mind.

The Philippines is a melting pot of cultures since many foreigners came. The Philippines was a colony of Spain for 333 years. During that time, countries like China, India and Portugal came to do trade. After Spain, the Americans came. During the war, the Japanese came. In this way, many cultures entered the Philippines.

Pancit

Lumpiang Shanghai

As Spain stayed the longest in the Philippines, it has the largest influence. There was a big influence on clothing, language, culture, and of course, food. There are many Spanish food in the Philippines. I don't know if it's the same food as in Spain, but we have Spanish sounding food like Estopado, Menudo, Lengua, Sarsado, Torta, Mais con Hielo, etc. The most commonly known food is Adobo. Everyone knows this food.

Next, there is the influence of China. Ever since the Spanish were in the Philippines, Filipinos had much contact with the Chinese and there are many Chinese who even migrated to the Philippines. For this reason, there are many Chinese dishes that entered the Philippines. Noodle dishes are abundant. There is pancit, which has different variations, for example, Pancit Bihon, Pancit Canton, Miki Bihon, Pancit Malabon, etc. The Philippines also has its own Ramen and we call it "Mami". Unlike Japanese Ramen, the soup of Mami is not that oily. We have chicken mami, beef mami, wonton mami, etc. There is also "Nikuman", which we call Siopao. The Chinese-type of food usually eaten at home is "Chopsuey", which is the equivalent of Japan's "Happousai".

Well, some people may think "Is there no real Philippine food?" There are. However, as the Philippines is made up of many islands, food differs according to island or region. For example, in the Bicol region, where they produce a lot of chili, there is a lot of spicy food. The famous food of this region is called the "Bicol Express". If you go to Cebu, you would be able to experience food of different taste. It's difficult to introduce everything about Philippine food here. It would be best if you go to the different regions and actually taste the food for yourself.

I would give you a recipe for 1 food, the famous adobo.

How to cook Chicken Adobo

Ingredients:

Oil (as needed)

Chicken (Pork is also okay)

Soy sauce and Vinegar (Ratio of 1:2)

Garlic 2-3 cloves (crush and mince)

Bay leaf 2 leaves, some black pepper

Sugar (to taste)

Procedure:

1. Mix the soy sauce and vinegar and soak the chicken for 30 minutes.
2. Put some oil in the fry pan and sauté the garlic.
3. Next add the chicken and stir fry until brown.
4. Add the remaining soy sauce and vinegar solution. Add the black pepper and bay leaves and simmer until chicken is tender. (about 10 minutes)
5. Add sugar to taste and simmer for another 5 minutes.
